The Mission Impact Council Innovation Lab

MIC Common Agenda

The MIC is a collective impact initiative of over 30 diverse Twin Cities organizations that is committed:

“To increase opportunities and equity in learning beyond the classroom for 12 to 24-year-olds that results in socially responsible, culturally competent youth leaders and employees that will create a greater Twin Cities.”

What follows is a presentation of the purpose, products and potential of the Native American Social Responsibility and Innovation Lab held in January, 2017.
Three MIC facilitators and six Little Earth youth interns collaboratively planned and delivered a four-session retreat to develop actionable ideas to increase opportunity and equity.

Minnesota is a national leader in disparity between racial and ethnic groups and needs to provide more opportunities for all youth to fulfill their potential for the Twin Cities to thrive.

- MIC members
- Non-profit Twin Cities agencies
- Local funder
- Organizations serving Native youth
- Little Earth community members

Individuals and organizations leave with the opportunity to follow-up on the most promising ideas for action and collaboration.
Seven Purposes of the Innovation Lab

1. Offer Leadership Experiences for Native American Youth
2. Dive Deep into Youth Aspirations & Priorities
3. Brainstorm Innovative Solutions
4. Develop and Show Best Ideas
5. Encourage Networking Within and Beyond the Little Earth Community
6. Explore Design Thinking Tools
7. Generate Action
The Role of Native Youth Leadership

Youth select meal vendors and menus

Youth lead opening smudge pot at start of each session

Youth select and lead teambuilding introductory activities

Youth select prizes and method for closing drawing.

Youth offer input and feedback in weekly meetings

Youth ideas drive all phases of the design process.
The Innovation Lab Three Focuses

Looking to solve issues in these three areas that...

- Represent key needs identified by the community
- Require a collective impact (can’t be solved by one organization)
- Address changing underlying systems (not just adding a program)
- Invite participants from different aspects of the community to work together

Week 1

Empathy

Begin to explore key opportunities and priorities to support Native American youth.

Activities

• Discuss previous MIC data on Native youth
• Rank important areas to address within youth development, cultural competence and employability
• Create “Portraits” of Native American youth – thriving and not thriving
Turning Data into Priorities

- In 2015, the MIC held two half-day meetings with high school students at Takota Prep to identify and document key opportunities and gaps for 12 to 24-year old Native American youth (see sample on right).

- At the first Innovation Lab evening in January, the participants took data from those 2015 gatherings and ranked their importance. This provided a beginning assessment for where to focus our innovation efforts.

Youth’s Profile of Why Other Peers Thrive
Week 2

Define

Identify Key Design Challenges Facing Native American Youth

Activities
Define the key challenges
Create “How Might We” statements
How Might We form a support group to preserve, teach and embrace our native language and learn our traditions?

- Understand our historical trauma in order to have a better understanding of our current situation
- Break away from the cycle that was set up for us
- Develop a stronger world view
- Develop a positive identity and cultural competence that can help us thrive in today’s society
- Youth teach their peers about tradition and ceremonies
- Expose non-natives to our culture and teachings
Defining Cultural Group Challenges
Intergenerational Ties

How Might We use a support group to get youth and adults to work together on the learning and preservation of language, culture and tradition?

- Raise awareness of already existing programs and resources
- Intertwine more about culture into programs.
- Develop show, videos (Migizi)
- Community-based theater where elders come together and tell cultural stories and then youth put into dramas and act (Partner with Walker, MIA, small theaters, Children’s theater)
- Parents take 5-10 minutes a day and ask what their children learned about culture and their extra-curricular activities.
- Develop an engaging process
- Expose youth to their cultural teachings and stories
- Inspire all natives to thrive
- Break a cycle that has continued for far too long.
- Teach our peers about tradition and ceremonies
How Might We use a support group to help more Native youth to access and succeed in internships?

- Transportation: Help youth get driver’s licenses and other means of transport.
- Transportation assistance—partner with Uber or Lyft
- Provide more opportunities to learn basic life and work skills.
- More mentorships and job coaches.
- Find work sites that are flexible and culturally welcoming.
- Help with transitional child care assistance for youth employees 18+
- Create an app to tell about job opportunities for each age group (i.e. 13-15, 16-18, 19+)
Defining Youth Development Group Challenges

Educational Success

How Might We use a support group to provide personal support and individual resource connections so that all youth can graduate and thrive?

- Reward students for doing well in school
- Involve elders to support youth education
- Provide help with difficult subjects
- Create games to make homework and studying for tests more fun
- Earn high school credits outside of school
- Help youth to identify their passions and set goals for the future
Week 3

Create/ Ideate

Brainstorm ideas to address the key opportunity or gaps.

Activities
Define Criteria for a Support Group
Graffiti Brainstorm for Words to Name the Group
Central Design Challenge

How might we create a support movement for Native youth that helps them build success in education, careers, and cultural pride and understanding?
Criteria for Defining a “Support Group”

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Design Characteristics</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>It’s a Movement</td>
<td>Would be a movement, not just a program, to help youth to break away from the cycle that was set up for us.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It Possesses a Unique Name</td>
<td>Names the initiative something different from support group (youth have had bad past experiences with counseling).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It Addresses Multiple Issues</td>
<td>Support youth in education, career, culture, health, family, connections, transportation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It Strengthens Identity</td>
<td>Develops positive identity and cultural competence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It’s Inclusive</td>
<td>Meets needs of both thriving and non-thriving youth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It’s Intergenerational</td>
<td>Involves parents/guardians/loved ones and youth. You just can’t help youth—parents themselves don’t have enough support</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It Utilizes Youth as Teachers</td>
<td>Would include youth exposing and teaching non-natives to our culture and teachings.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It Serves Food</td>
<td>This is an important draw to get people to come.</td>
</tr>

Week 4

Prototype

Make some sort of model of what you want to create in two areas:

- Designing a support “space” within the Little Earth Community to enhance education.

- Designing an arts focus that involves the youth and supports them in their cultural competence.

Conclusion
To Do

• Meet with Mpls Public Schools to connect the Little Earth Youth with summer mentoring and employability program.
• Continue potential connections and partnerships with current organizations serving Native American youth to address two key design challenges.
• Explore bringing Migizi tutoring to Little Earth next fall
• Follow up meeting in May with key youth leaders from the Little Earth community.
Lessons Learned and Highlights

• Great to meet on-site, within Little Earth community

• Important to work with the youth leaders/interns to capture their voice and see their leadership.

• Vital to have strong planning and feedback connections with the Little Earth staff/adult leaders

• Original data continues to be validated; use available new data

• Hold to the process loosely, and be willing to adapt, adapt, and adapt!
